STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

No. XXVII.

Washington, Jan. 1, 1834.—A happy new year to my far off friends! It is the first, and will probably be the last occasion, on which I shall send them my salutations from the Metropolis of the Union—not because it is not pleasant enough to be.

"A looker-on here in Vienna," during our more than a Rump Session, but because one Session is sufficient to initiate one into all the secrets of political parties and their principles; and moreover, I do not like to be a mere looker-on very long at a time, nor twice in my life, any where.

There are a thousand things here that admonish me of the brevity of life, and the importance of time—of the few chances for distinction, that even the most propitious circumstances present, and of the little distinction the most ambitious can gain.

More labor and talent are requisite for distinction in Congress than any other situation in the government. But I will not read you a homily on this subject; suffice it to say, that the great herald of Fame, the Press, generally announces a judgment from which there is no appeal; that if you should witness the performances of public men here, it would only confirm you in the justness of public report, proper allowance always being made for party prejudice. But enough.

The day has been delightful, and every body delighted—except the malcontents, who find no delight on any day, or any occasion. On New Year's Day, it has always been customary for the President to hold a levee, and receive all parties and all classes. The day has been devoted to this long standing custom. The court yard was crowded with carriages, and the saloons with company, from 9 o'clock in the morning till 3 in the afternoon. The Old Hero was in fine health and spirits, and welcomed many thousands by a warm and hearty shake of the hand. I passed an hour in wandering through the labyrinths of the crowd, and witnessed nothing but new faces at every turn. It would be impossible to convey an adequate idea of the brilliant assemblage, consisting of the beauty and fashion, the youth and age of every section of the Union. The Foreign Ministers were all present in their splendid gala dresses, and their Secretaries and Attachés; many of the Officers of the Army and Navy, in full dress—the Vice President, the Secretaries of the Departments, and the Attorney General, in the simple garb of citizens. The ladies were arrayed in their best smiles, and in the newest fashions. I saw no lady who looked more interesting and attractive than Mrs Donelson. But recollecting how fresh and blooming she looked on the 4th of March, 1829, I could not but observe, and regret, that the lily had usurped the place of the rose upon her cheek. I noticed many ladies of rare beauty, whose names I do not feel at liberty to introduce to the public, some from Philadelphia, others from New York, Baltimore, Virginia, and the far West—Kentucky had a fair representation. Surely the most beautiful of all beautiful things in creation, is a beautiful woman.

But let me say a word in honor of my own sex. One of the finest specimens, which I saw to-day, of an elegant, venerable, courted gentleman, was that of the Portuguese Minister. Another, of a different age and model, was William Pitt Adams, attached to the British legation—a perfect Apollo—and I am pleased to add, upon the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, that he is a young gentleman of fine abilities, and rare attainments.

The Secretaries all looked remarkably well; and seemed to enjoy the occasion. Gov. Cass had a lambent smile playing around his brow; Gov. Woodbury, a friendly one upon his lip; Mr McLane's was rather a serious smile; and Mr Taney's, a rare smile, and a smile rarely; Mr Van Buren, with a placid countenance, had the same kind look for all; and saluted his acquaintance, or made acquaintance, with the same peculiar ease and grace, so natural to him, and so characteristic of the man; and all, without any air of affected dignity, but with an unobtrusive modesty peculiarly his own. Mr Webster was present, and seemed to enjoy himself as a guest, as much as if he had been a partizan of democracy "dyed in the wool." I rather think he is growing too wise to.

"Give up for party, what was meant for mankind."

Will he suffer himself longer to follow in Mr Clay's wake, when he can make a bigger one himself, and when as many followers? It is shrewdly thought not. But I am getting into politics—which I meant to avoid, at least, for one day.

In conclusion I will add, that New Year's day is quite a holiday here; that all classes hold it in high respect; put on their best smiles, and their Sunday clothes; dine sumptuously, and dance merrily, and make sure of commencing the year with mirth and hilarity, however they may end it. REIS EFFENDI.

TUESDAY MORNING, JANUARY 7, 1834.

PRICE $4 PER ANN. IN ADVANCE.

THE STATE MUSEUM!

WASHINGTON HALL, No. 221, Washington street, opposite the head of Franklin street, will be open for the reception of visitors, and brilliantly illuminated in the Evening. The Museum is in complete order and decorated for the occasion.

MAJOR STEVENS, the wonder of the age, will be present and happy to welcome and entertain his friends and patrons at the State Museum.

Among the great additions, is the Grand Mechanical exhibition which presents a beautiful Allegorical representation of the Treaty of Ghent, comprising over twenty moving figures as natural as life.

The Sugar Plantation is in fine order, and continues to be as great an attraction as ever.

THE MORNING POST.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1834.

New Year's Day at Washington.—Upon the first page of this paper will be found an interesting account of the birth of the year at the Capital of the Union, by REIS EFFENDI.

At the request of gentlemen connected with the newspaper press in this city, the Postmaster has, we understand, made arrangements to assort the newspapers by the Southern mail at any hour during the night, when it may arrive out of season.

THE U. S. BANK AND THE MONEY MARKET.

We stated in our former remarks that the Bank managers and advisers, operating on an illusive theory relative to the national character of money and paper currency, would be disappointed in the results of their measures upon the money market.

These Bank gentlemen assume that Bank bills, as well as coin, are money, and they consider money as the constituent part or element of price, and hence they infer that prices, generally, are raised or lowered in proportion as money, whether coin or paper, is increased or diminished in quantity. They believe, as a necessary consequence of this principle, that by hoarding as much specie as the capital and means of the Bank will enable it to command, it would so diminish the coin and bills in circulation, as actually to destroy price, and stop the operations of commerce. The idea that money is the constituent and element of price, is coeval with the earliest writers on currency, and has been tacitly received as an indisputable axiom long before its adoption by those distinguished political economists, Mr George McDowell and Mr Nicholas Biddle. In the noted report made by the former of these gentlemen, as chairman of the committee of Ways and Means, in Congress, in 1830 and in 1832, on the subject of the Bank, this principle is assumed as not only tenable, but indisputable, in the following words:—

"No proposition is better established than that the value of money, whether it consist of specie or paper, is depreciated in exact proportion to the increase of its quantity in any given state of the demand for it. If, for example, the Banks in 1816 doubled the quantity of the circulating medium, by their excessive issues, they produced a general degradation of the entire mass of the currency, including gold and silver, proportionate to the redundancy of issues, and wholly independent of the relative depreciation of Bank paper at different places, as compared with specie."

Operating upon this principle, that money, whether coin or paper, is the element of price, the Bank supposes itself able, by its expansive and contractile power, to affect prices to any extent, at its own will and pleasure! and that by hoarding money, it can command a renewal of its charter, under pain, in case of refusal, of stopping the whole trade and commerce of the country. Such is the beautiful, but fanciful, theory by which the Bank shapes its course at the present moment.

If money were really the constituent or element of price, or had any direct influence on price, we might indeed, under our monetary system, be at the mercy of the Bank. But thanks to the natural law, which no legislative enactments, nor power, short of omnipotence, can change, money is no part of the elements of price—it has no direct, and little collateral influence on it, only in the ratio that it affects demand, which may be in a greater or less proportion than the amount of value, but no part of the value measured, more than the yard stick, the measure of length, is a part of the length measured, or scales, which measure gravity or ponderosity, are parts of the weight they determine.

In proof of the position assumed, is the well known fact, that in times when money is abundant some articles fall much in price, while on the other hand during times of greatest money pressure, many articles rise in price.

Bank bills, which are our paper currency, redeemable in a fixed value, do not differ in their character, or effect on prices, from any other kind of credit redeemable in the same fixed value. All credit, whether in the form of Bank bills, for they are promised to pay, notes of hand, book accounts or any other form, has the same effect on price, that money has, incidentally, only, as it affects demand. Bank notes, we say, do not differ in their nature from other kinds of credit. If we hold a note or bank bill of the United States Bank for one thousand dollars, it is only evidence that the Bank owes us that sum. If we have a credit on the books of the Bank, for the like sum, it indicates the same thing: or if we have a credit for the like amount on the books of any other Bank or individual, it indicates that that Bank or that individual owes us the same sum, the one having precisely the same effect as the other on price. The only difference in these kinds of credit is, that the Bank note, from the usages of business, is more readily transferred from one to another than book credits. But, after all, the Bank note is but a promise to pay, and is no better than any other promise that is redeemed on demand.

Our general system of business is a credit system—promises to pay, regulated by a fixed money standard of value, and resting for redemption, on the property of the country and the future earnings of the promisors. Little money is needed, or enters into these transactions. These promises are piled up in every variety of form, the multifarious business of society requires, and often amount to twenty, fifty or a hundred times the value of the whole property of the country. A single article of merchandise of ten thousand dollars, may pass through twenty different hands on credit, before either of the payments become due, and thus form the basis of promises to pay to the amount of two hundred thousand dollars. In the settlement, these promises would balance each other with the exception of the first ten thousand dollars, without the use of money, and even the first sum would probably be paid by a promise of some other sort.

Our credit system, therefore supersedes the use of money in a great degree, and is in fact a system of balances, estimated on a fixed money value, and based finally for its redemption on the wealth of the country. If every man were to pay his debts, and no man in the whole country owed one cent, all the property of the country would be the same as it is now, and we should have the houses and lands, the goods and chattels—the provisions and furniture, the same as they are now, placed indeed in the hands of the true owners, but being in fact neither more nor less than they are now, while buried under a load of promises, of a hundred fold their value.

In this extended system of credit, when a large operation calls for the payment of the balances due him, he induces others within the sphere of his influence to call in their meet his call, and that circle of influence, is large in proportion to the amount of capital the States is now pursuing this plan, for the purpose we have before stated. This call for balances, however, can only affect prices as it influences demand, and its influence must cease entirely when the balance is paid. Hence when the Bank shall have called in and hoarded all that it is worth and all that it can command, as it has threatened to do, its power will cease, the dross it has hoarded will not be missed from the immense mass of our wealth, and it will not have affected to any perceptible extent the general price of merchandise. Its power, too, will decrease daily, as it daily hoards its merchandise. Its call has induced others to call, which has caused much alarm and individual injury to some whose promises were much extended, and a rapid diminution—a decrease of debts, the settling of one balance by another, has been the consequence. We think the decrease of promises in this way, since the Bank began its call in August, is nearly two hundred millions of dollars. Many have already emerged from this great ocean of contracts, free from debt, others are coming out daily, and in a little while, all will be beyond the grasp of the Bank.

During this process, some will be found bankrupt, who have, in fact, long been so, others will be made bankrupt who would not have been, if more time had been allowed them to pay their balances; but the great mass of the people will have come out unharmed.

In estimating the decrease of promises since August, at two hundred millions of dollars, we think ourselves within bounds. Few persons form an adequate idea of the immense aggregate of individual contracts—of promises to pay, in the business transactions of a numerous people. In this city alone, the daily contracts made and settled, are estimated at more than one million of dollars. The daily receipts of country bank bills, at a single bank in this city, where they are received, are four hundred thousand dollars. All these various contracts are made and settled in the money standard of value, but without the use of much of the money itself, one balance meeting and cancelling another, and so along. The Bank of the United States may, therefore, go on and hoard twenty millions more of specie, which will be to the full length of its tether, and a little beyond, deducting from its capital the cost of its banking houses, and its loans to politicians, on which latter it can hardly expect a greater dividend than an applauding speech, or a prosing essay; and it will then find, to its great surprise, that the world has not ceased its revolutions—that the natural laws are still in operation, and that value remains, though it has hoarded many of the machines by which we measure it—as we should have our yards of cloth, even if Mr Biddle were to lock up all the yard-sticks in the town.

There is one way, however, in which the bank is formidable, and can injuriously affect all who come within the sphere of its influence—it is by a vacillating course—by expanding and suddenly contracting its loans. Its operations pervade more or less all our commercial places. At any moment, after it has carried up its loans, by suddenly calling for balances, it can immense numbers unprepared to meet its call, and distress them. In this way it can compel a rapid and often injurious curtailment by individuals. Placing, then, such means in the power of one institution, wielded by one man, is but to hold a temptation to him to oppress and plunder his neighbors—and if there were no other reason, this, alone, would be sufficient, in the opinion of prudent men, for refusing, under any circumstances, to renew the grant of a power so dangerous.

The Bank.—Philadelphia has resisted the orders of Mr. Biddle to notion to the factors great meeting in that city called by his order for the express purpose, has refused to do his bidding. Will the citizens of Boston meanly truckle to his mandate issued, to his creatures and agents here, to send forth a memorial from this city? Don Miguel, and others, of his tools, are preparing to dragoon the citizens into the measure. The Deposites, however, will not be restored, the work to effect it is labor lost. Aye, worse than lost—it tends to make money scarce by the cry that it is scarce. Do men who want to buy merchandise, cry up the market? And why do men of sense, who want to hire money, cry up the rate of interest? We say to the money lenders, make your investments quickly—in a few short weeks you will be unable to obtain even five per cent. interest per annum for your capital.

MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE.—Monday, Jan. 1.—In the Senate, the appointment of the Standing Committees was the only business of importance transacted.

In the House, Mr. Saltonstall, from the Committee on the Governor's Election, reported that a special Committee of three be appointed to receive, sort, and count the votes in front of the Speaker's desk, and that each member in presence of the House, deposited by the Clerk. Made the order of the day for Wednesday, 11 o'clock. Adjourned.

Organization of the City Government.—The new City Council convened yesterday. After prayer by the Rev. Dr. Wainwright, the oaths of office were administered to his Honor the Mayor, by the Hon. Chief Justice Shaw. Mr. Lyman being sworn, spoke, in substance, as follows:—

I have now taken the oaths prescribed by the City Charter. Before I proceed to administer the same oaths to the other members of the City Council, I trust I shall be indulged with the brief privilege of expressing, in the presence of those of my fellow citizens who are now assembled here, the deep sense I have of the honor which the people of Boston have conferred on me, by electing me to the office of Mayor. For that token of their regard, favor, and confidence, I beg them at this time to accept my best and heartfelt thanks and acknowledgments.

It is, also, a circumstance exceedingly grateful to my feelings, that I succeed to a Magistrate with whom I have the advantage of being on terms of personal friendship. In rendering full and ready justice to the merits and services of others who have preceded me in this office, it shall be my earnest endeavor to profit by their example.

The Mayor then administered the oaths of office to the Aldermen who were present. A letter from the Hon. James Savage, declining to serve as an Alderman, was then read, and an order passed that warrants be issued, appointing Monday next as the day for supply, the vacancy thus created in the Board of Aldermen.

In Common Council.—Josiah Quincy, Jr. Esq. was elected President on the first ballot. Whole number of votes, 45—Necessary to a choice, 23. Josiah Quincy, Jr. had 29; John W. James, 6; Joseph S. Hastings, 5; Edward G. Prescott, 3; Eliphalet Williams, 2. Mr. Richard G. Wait was elected Clerk, pro tempore, on the first ballot. Whole number of votes, 42—Necessary to a choice, 22. Richard G. Wait had 41; George S. Phillips, 1.

In Unanimous, Samuel F. Mc Cleary, Esq. was chosen City Clerk, the whole number of votes being 43.—Transcript.

STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

NO. XXVIII.

Washington, Jan. 20, 1834.—The revellers of yesterday have had to return to the dull drudgery of duty to-day, forgetting, I dare say, as I have, every thing but the present moment and its allotted labors.

Col. Benton had the floor to-day in the Senate, and Mr. Polk in the House. I passed my time in the former place, to hear Mr. Clay's speech answered, because I had heard the speech itself.

The Vice President made a few remarks before Col. Benton commenced, in reference to the manifestations of feeling and applause which had been exhibited by the spectators on former occasions; and gave notice, if any indications of the kind were again exhibited, he should feel it his duty to order the galleries cleared. These remarks were well timed, though quite unexpectedly; well timed, inasmuch as the applause had been manifested towards the speakers of the opposition, and the intention to suppress it, only expressed when an administration man was to be heard in reply.

Col. Benton commenced his speech by saying that the resolutions under discussion (Mr. Clay's) were neither more nor less than gross charges of high crimes and misdemeanors against the Chief Magistrate of the nation; that they were made by the same body who were the constitutional judges to try him; as well as judges; that whatever might be said in debate under these resolutions, no action could take place upon them; that the resolutions were a mere nullity, as to any proceedings that could be founded on them against the President; that it was intended to pass them for the purpose of bringing odium upon him and an officer of his cabinet.

After fully showing the tendency and design of the resolutions, he made some very pointed remarks in reply to Mr. Clay's allusions to Mr. Taney's being a federalist, and to his vote on the Missouri question; all the while Mr. C. was observed to be taking notes.

Col. Benton went very fully into the nature and duties of the Treasury Department; showing in the first place that General Jackson was the very first President that had placed an effectual check upon the Treasurer, and, prevented him from drawing any money (from the Treasury) deposited in the Bank of the United States or its branches. Formerly it was the custom, when any order was drawn for money, (after it had passed through the hands of the Comptroller, Register, Treasurer and Secretary,) for the Treasurer to retain it, and send his check to the Bank for money; and without any order being drawn or countersigned, it was perfectly easy for the Treasurer, had he been so disposed, to have drawn money to any amount from the Bank. But an effectual check was put to this chance of abusing his trust, by the Treasurer being required to present the order thus countersigned to the Bank, and leaving it there as a receipt of the monies so disbursed.

And it was for this, he asked, that Gen. Jackson was compared to Caesar, robbing the Treasury? Was it for putting an effectual check upon every officer of the Government against drawing a cent from the Treasury, unless for appropriations according to law, and in a manner required by law, that he was accused of desiring to possess himself of the public monies?

He went into a full examination of the conduct of the Bank, respecting their mode of stock jobbing, and swelling their loans, for the purpose of making private bona fide profit, and for the worse purposes of political manœuvres.

I perceive that I am only doing him injustice by attempting to give an outline of his argument; I must, therefore, refer you to his printed speech, which may, perhaps, reach you as soon as my letter. REIS EFFENDI.

WRITING.—Mr MUNYAN continues to teach his unrivaled System of Penmanship, at No. 3, Scollay's Buildings, Pemberton Hill, where the most scrawling, scribbling or vulgar hand, is converted into a free, open, easy, expeditious business hand in a few easy lessons. His System has been pronounced by the best judges of Chirography, to be superior to any other that has yet been invented. All those that are desirous of changing a stiff, clumsy contracted hand into an open, free, easy and comparative elegant style of writing, are requested to call and examine his specimens and see the improvement made by his scholars in this city.

The most satisfactory improvement guaranteed to every scholar, who shall receive a regular course of instruction, or the money cheerfully refunded.

They are perfectly water tight, light and flexible as any common canvas, and twice as strong.

These covers will be made to order, any size or shape that may be required, and orders from any part of the country will be punctually attended to.

As it is determined to bring them into general use, it is expected that gentlemen who send orders from a distance will make arrangements to pay their bills in Boston, on delivery of the goods. All orders to be addressed to the subscriber, CHARLES JAMES BOYD, No 27 Merchant's Row, Boston.

June 14

NEW ESTABLISHMENT.—The subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has leased for a number of years the spacious basement story of the new building recently erected, and known by the name of Cudman's Buildings, in Wilson's Lane, on the westerly side of the United States Bank, a few feet from State street, which is fitted up in a good style as any of its class in the vicinity, and furnished throughout to correspond with the improved taste of the times, and will be open THIS DAY for the reception of company.

It being the intention of the subscriber to furnish his friends and customers with every luxury which the market affords, (with the exception of ardent spirit) and as he will superintend every branch of his business, he hopes his friends and the public will afford him that patronage which it is intended his establishment shall merit.

The superiority of these coverings over all others heretofore in use is so great, that the article must be seen before it can be fully appreciated.

They are perfectly water tight, light and flexible as any common canvas, and twice as strong.

These covers will be made to order, any size or shape that may be required, and orders from any part of the country will be punctually attended to.
